

The Weekly Rhythm

One short video a week until nominations, each ending on a single fact with its source on screen.

OCT – JAN
16 WEEKS

WHY IT MATTERS

Posts published with a caption reach 80,500. The same account without one reaches 802. That is not a strategy problem, it is a workflow problem, and it is the cheapest fix available.

A weekly rhythm also builds an audience before the film lands, so that in January these are not strangers.

WHAT GETS BUILT

- Sixteen shorts, one a week, in four movements: establish, evidence, argument, case
- A format that repeats – a fixed opening mark, burned-in subtitles, a sourced fact card to close
- A caption system written differently for Facebook and TikTok, because the audiences differ
- A distribution list of ward coordinators, because a page post does not reach the groups on its own
- Weekly measurement on share rate and completion, not vanity view counts

TIMELINE

First short out in week one of October. Weekly through to nominations.

WHAT I NEED

One person in the office who owns publishing with me. Access to the account, not a hand-off each time.

EXECUTED BY

Me – shoot, edit, caption, schedule, publish, measure.

DONE LOOKS LIKE

Sixteen weeks of material that can each be checked, and an audience that recognises the format before it sees the name.

SIXTEEN WEEKS, FOUR MOVEMENTS

Oct – establish Nov – the harvest Dec – the argument Jan – the case

Captioned posts reach 80,500. The same account without a caption reaches 802.
